

When I first got my laptop I didn't think too much about file management, but I soon realized that it was something I needed to pay attention to. A lot of my files are still a mess, however, I did teach myself a lot about file management and now things are much better. I sometimes feel like I understand the windows GUI now although I keep learning more about it. I didn't even know what a command-line interface was until now. After reading a little about it I still don't have much of an idea on how to use it, but I do want to learn. It seems like a much more effective and efficient way to manage a computer as long as you know what you're looking at. After all, I think that having a GUI is a much more user-friendly approach, however, the command-line interface seems important for people who are more familiar with computers.
